The U.S. and European stock markets experienced a day of mixed results. Wall Street, in particular, responded to the ADP Employment Change, which unexpectedly dropped to 103,000, well below the estimated 130,000, marking a -51.42 % decline from the previous year. This figure represents the lowest reading since February 2021, which was 114,000. The ADP data, coupled with yesterday's Job Openings reading, signal to the markets that the Federal Reserve might have ended its interest rate campaign.

The report also highlights a noteworthy decrease in Median Pay, falling to 5.60%, the lowest gain since 2021. Investors eagerly anticipate Friday's U.S. Nonfarm jobs report, including crucial metrics such as unemployment and labor participation rates.

On the legislative front, the U.S. Congress convened eight top U.S. bank CEOs today to discuss adopting the proposed "Basel 3 Endgame" regulations. The regulations aim to bolster banks' capital levels to withstand future risks better. However, the CEOs, including Jamie Dimon of JP Morgan Chase, expressed strong opposition, asserting that the rules could adversely affect the economy, markets, businesses of all sizes, and American households. If implemented in its current form, the regulations would increase capital requirements on the largest banks by approximately 25%, potentially benefiting non-banking entities.
